A Year in the Life of Fond du Lac

Identity & Culture

Tools 2 – Community health and wellness indicators reflecting daily life in Saskatchewan’s isolated far North: Implications for program planning and evaluation.

RESEARCH TEAM

Tammy Lidgouer and Hazel Angioli – Fond du Lac Denesuline First Nation

Sylvia Almon – SPHERU, University of Saskatchewan

Brenda Jeffery – SPHERU, University of Regina

Brandon Anthony – Central European University, Budapest

Jennifer Poudrier – University of Saskatchewan

June Anonson – University of Saskatchewan

Georgia MacDonald, Vince Kotha, and Fay Michayluk – Athabasca Health Authority

Evelyn Throassie – Black Lake Denesuline First Nation

Diana Fedosoff – SPHERU, University of Saskatchewan

Project funded by Canadian Institutes of Health Research (Institute of Aboriginal Peoples’ Health) Grant # 173106

Photographers

Cherina Adam, Noreen Janvier, Tammy Lidgouer, Sylvia Marten, Allan Mercredi, Roseanna Noel, and Jennifer Pacquette

Our smoke house is used to smoke meat, fish, and other wild foods.

This is a caribou head being skinned and then cut up so it can be cooked for a traditional meal.

Food is ready to eat a traditional meal outdoors.

We are fishing on a beautiful day on Lake Athabasca.

Socializing is part of our culture.

We are enjoying an afternoon of BINGO.

Elders Day – an afternoon of singing and socializing.

Photographers

Cherina Adam, Noreen Janvier, Tammy Lidgouer, Sylvia Marten, Allan Mercredi, Roseanna Noel, and Jennifer Pacquette

Our smoke house is used to smoke meat, fish, and other wild foods.

Making bannock to eat with meals is part of our culture.

At Elders Day, ladies share their sewing talents.